GREAT Commotion in Syria.—Accounts from Lebanon are of the most distressing kind. The arrangements recently made to prevent a renewal of the feudatiapses and refine their sense of truth. You will not speak in vain. If they never mind, if habit is too powerful, still their nobler nature will not have been addressed in vain. They will not forget the counsels they have not strength to follow, and the benefits will be seen in their children or children's children.

Many say—Well, suppose we do all this, what then?—They are so fond of change they will leave us. What then? One word as to this love of change. We hear people blaming it in their servants, who can and do go to Nisgara, to the South, to the Springs, to Europe, to the sea side; in short, who are always on the move whenever they feel the need of variety to reanimate mind, health, or spirits. Change of piace, as to family employment, is the only way domestics have of seeing life. The only way imaigrants have of seeing life. The only way imaigrants have of seeing life. The only way own attraction which they have entered; how natural that they should incline to it? Once more, put yourself in their places, and then judge them gently from your own, if you would be just to them, if you would be of any use.
